

STARTUPS & EMERGING COMPANIES

Hodgson Russ's multidisciplinary emerging companies team regularly advises start-up and high-growth companies at every stage of their evolution and on the full spectrum of their legal issues. Our attorneys have represented entrepreneurs and emerging companies as well as private equity and venture capital companies that finance them.

Having been on both sides of deals, we understand the issues that emerging companies face. Drawing on our experience with a diverse group of industries, we are able to provide practical and economically sensible advice to start-up and high-growth companies.

We help companies at all stages of their lifecycle. At the beginning, we help in the formation of the appropriate structure. We frequently complement our clients' management teams, serving as outside counsel. We work with them in identifying their intellectual property and assist them in understanding blocking intellectual property. We work on design-around or licensing strategies and draft and negotiate technology agreements. We also assist companies with regulatory and compliance issues. When companies reach the appropriate stage of development, we represent them in their initial public and private offerings, exit strategies, acquisitions by strategic or financial buyers, mergers, restructuring, or growth opportunities.

In situations when litigation is necessary, attorneys from our Business Litigation Practices work together to advance our clients' causes in a practical and cost-effective manner.

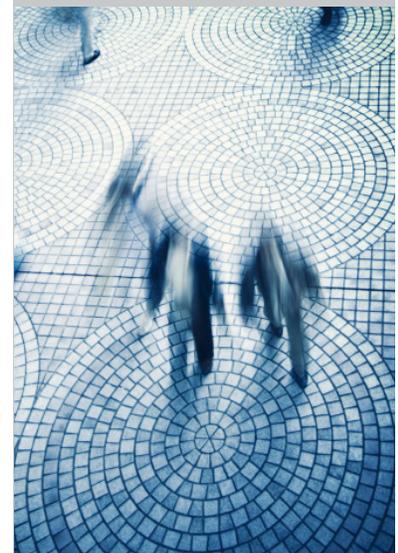

Industries served by our Startups and Emerging Companies Practice include, among others, biotechnology, clean-tech, digital media, health care, medical device, financial services, semiconductor, software, telecommunications, and advanced manufacturing. Our clients are both U.S.- and foreign-based.
